NCQA Workshop:

Patient-Centered Medical Home Recognition for Osteopathic Primary Care Physicians

The concept of a patient-centered medical home (PCMH) is receiving much attention as an important foundation for changing the way primary care services are delivered.

Payers, purchasers and policymakers see PCMH as a way to achieve the “Triple Aim” – improving access and patient experiences, increasing the quality of care, and moderating costs.

Nationwide, more than 90 commercial health plans, 42 state Medicaid programs, federal agencies, and the military have adopted the PCMH model on various scales.

Why Osteopathic Primary Care Physicians Should Attend the NCQA PCMH Workshop

The American College of Osteopathic Family Physicians, the American College of Osteopathic Internists, and the American College of Osteopathic Pediatricians are collaborating to offer their members the knowledge and tools to transform their practices into Patient-Centered Medical Homes and achieve NCQA recognition.

The Workshop goal is to provide ACOFP, ACOI, and ACOP members and their staff with in-depth information related to the six standards of the current PCMH recognition requirements that align with the core components of primary care.

Who Should Attend

The Workshop is designed for healthcare professionals working to achieve the “Triple Aim” by transforming their practice environment according to principles and standards for NCQA recognition as a Patient-Centered Medical Home.

- » Primary Care Physicians
- » Physician Assistants
- » Nurse Practitioners
- » Registered Nurses
- » Office Managers
- » Quality Improvement Managers

By the end of the program, participants will be able to:

- » Review and discuss sample submissions for PCMH Recognition including documentation that meets and does not meet the requirements
- » Discuss scoring for each element and strategies to enhance and improve valid content
- » Provide an overview of the application process for becoming an NCQA Recognized PCMH

Areas of focus for the 2014 changes:

- » Additional emphasis of team-based care
- » Care management focused on high-need patients
- » Sustaining quality improvement on patient experience, cost, and clinical quality
- » Align with meaningful use stage two
- » Further integration with behavioral health

About the NCQA

The mission of the National Committee for Quality Assurance (NCQA) is to drive improvement throughout the health care system, raising health care quality and value to the top of the national agenda.

NCQA’s recognition programs provide a blueprint for measurement, improvement, transparency and accountability. Since the original program launch in 2008, NCQA has been the most used PCMH recognition tool, with almost 28,000 physicians at almost 5,800 practices recognized in 2013.

NCQA and others are moving toward evaluating practices based on clinical performance results, in addition to the other areas assessed for PCMH. In 2011, NCQA established the Distinction in Patient Experience Reporting as a first step toward such a performance-based evaluation.
